

← Review: "Zwischerliecht" group exhibition at LxWxH Gallery, Seattle

SFAQ Pick: "ENERGY THAT IS ALL AROUND" group exhibition highlighting the Mission School at SFAI's Walter McBean Gallery, San Francisco. Opening tonight, September 12th. →

Review: Jillian McDonald's "Valley of the Deer," at the Ontario College of Art & Design

Posted on September 12, 2013 by sfaq

Valley of the Deer, Single Channel BluRay Video, 48:30 minutes, 2013

Here's a scary movie to play at your avant-garde haunted house. Jillian McDonald's "Valley of the Deer," recently shown at Ontario College of Art & Design, was shot at the Glenfiddich International Artist's Residency in Dufftown, Scotland using local residents and costumes and masks made by McDonald on site in response to the area.

The actors, standing solitarily or slowly ambling toward the screen, confirm there is something scary about people in animal masks (if the Hollywood blockbuster "You're Next" hadn't already done that for you—though I can never be too terrified of anything with a title that requires such careful grammar.)

Valley of the Deer, Single Channel BluRay Video, 48:30 minutes, 2013

Valley of the Deer, Single Channel BluRay Video, 48:30 minutes, 2013

The Scottish woodland and farms lend themselves to a romanticized, mythic pastoral imbued with ominous foreshadowing, in full realization of the cinematic power to give landscapes a psychic emotional connection to the viewer. McDonald plays up a magical realism with muted wide shots of vast land, and a haunting soundtrack.

At times the tension created by these scenes is broken by rainbows, or mythic looking glowing animals, as a nod to the supernatural forces in folkloric tradition, but there's no clear distinction of good and bad, rather the hard indifference of nature. Ultimately, it's not a horror movie in the sense that it offers something explicitly scary (though, spoiler, someone dies,) it doesn't scare, but it points out that we have the emotion, how quickly it can be provoked or soothed in response to what we're seeing, and how uneasy we naturally are with the unknown.

For more information visit here.

-Contributed by Kathryn McKinney

This entry was posted in current and tagged art, artist, California, contemporary, costume, horror, Jillian McDonald, Kathryn McKinney, new, ocad, Ontario College of Art & Design, residence, residency, Review, San Francisco Arts Quarterly, scarey, SFAQ, Valley of the Deer, video, write up. Bookmark the permalink.
← Review: "Zwischenlicht" group exhibition at LxWxH Gallery, Seattle
SFAQ Pick: "ENERGY THAT IS ALL AROUND" group exhibition highlighting the Mission School at SFAI's Walter McBean Gallery, San Francisco. Opening tonight, September 12th. →

CROWN POINT PRESS SUMMER CHOICES

*Tomma Abts, Robert Bechtle,
Chris Burden, Francesco Clemente,
Richard Diebenkorn, Mary Heilmann,
Sol LeWitt, Jockum Nordström,
Laura Owens, Amy Sillman, and Ed Ruscha*
through September 6, 2014

Gallery
Paule
Anglim

SOUTHERN EXPOSURE

 HEADLANDS
CENTER FOR THE ARTS

ASIAN CONTEMPORARY
ART WEEK
SAN FRANCISCO AND THE BAY AREA
SEPTEMBER 20 - 28
ACW

©2014-2015 San Francisco Arts Quarterly