Time Out says

Wed May 30 2012

As a percussionist, Eli Keszler employs a fleet, loose-limbed rhythmic vocabulary; as a composer, he deploys his barrage among massive slabs of sound, skittering through waves of resonance and harmonic density. His performance this evening marks the opening of L-Carrier, a sound-art installation made with piano wires struck and scraped by robot arms; for this performance, he'll lead an eight-piece ensemble in a live, scored realization of the piece, with further manipulation from a remote website processing input from surveillance cameras. However heady the process, the resulting sounds are bound to be positively elemental
