

INDIE STATIK

Go to ...

Free Games

A Satire About Compliments And Game Design: nothing you have done deserves such praise

A Satire About Compliments And Game Design: nothing you have done deserves such praise

Chris Priestman

Free Games

July 8th, 2013

3 Comments

There are studies out there that look into the effect that games have on us humans, many of which conclude that they can act as a good means of positive reinforcement in our lives and help to lift our spirits. Jason Nelson is the antithesis to that. Or at least the game he was commissioned to make by the National Endowment for Art, nothing you have done deserves such praise, is.

Like a few other games have done over the years, nothing you have done deserves such praise takes an inward look at games and how they reward players for doing the most meaningless of tasks. There are a few levels in which you are given something to do, something very simple. This could be falling, jumping or running – something simple and very mediocre, as far as gameplay is concerned. This allows for an exaggeration of the rewards you're receiving for following these instructions that lies at the heart of this satire.

It's a purposely ugly game overall, but dressed up in places to look a little more appealing. This, of course, is the equivalent of "a wolf in sheep's clothing" as Jason's effort is to isolate certain elements common in games, including images that we may recognize, so that they look out of place and serve to the cause of complimenting you. After just a couple of levels, the cacophony of sounds and mix of disconnected images and environments causes the compliments to be almost become horrific in nature.

Perhaps the message is one of illustrating that excess of anything, even compliments, can be harmful.

If you're a regular player of games, then you'll know the kind of thing we're referring to here. Let's say you've jumped up a stack of crates. In some games, that's worth an Achievement or Trophy, which practically means nothing in and of itself, anyway. This specific practice is often employed by developers to make the player feel good about themselves so that they may keep on playing so they get that feeling over and over again. It's also been used heavily by certain companies to entice players to spend more money on a game or to simply buy it in the first place. "Why would you buy this game?" they ask. To earn the Achievements so you can "show off" to your friends, apparently.

"our worlds (digital and breathing) are filled with needless and unearned praise. This art/poetry game satisfies your compliment addiction."

This is part of the target of Jason Nelson with this game, but it's a little more encompassing than that as it's really about all of game design that positively reinforces the actions a player performs in a game. Personally, I think this approach to looking at games is slightly outdated now as we have games that aren't all about complimenting the player. Designers these days want to stretch the full spectrum of games and see what they can do, and it's much more than the happy ending.

Still, it's worth playing for its scornful nature and aesthetic of the ugly that's used as part of an overarching message.

TAGS FREE GAME, INDIE GAMES, INDIE STATIK, JASON NELSON, NOTHING YOU HAVE DESERVES SUCH PRAISE, TURBULENCE

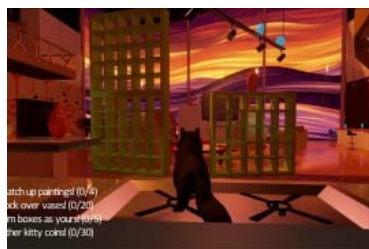

RELATED POSTS

Tousle With Your Tophats In Gentlemen Dispute

Indie Statik Glitchtape: Cerebral Shattering

Flaunt Your Feline's Frenetic Athleticism In Purrkour

The Puzzling Delicacy Of Slaughtering Smiling Skeletons In The Cave Of

10193

Followers

4,805

Fans

45,000

Subscribers

SEARCH

All Content

RELATED POSTS

Tousle With Your Tophats In Gentlemen Dispute

□ July 25th, 2014

Indie Statik Glitchtape: Cerebral Shattering

□ July 22nd, 2014

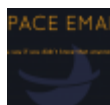

Flaunt Your Feline's Frenetic Athleticism In Purrkour

□ July 10th, 2014

The Puzzling Delicacy Of Slaughtering Smiling Skeletons In The Cave Of Atman

□ July 2nd, 2014

Space Email Relaunches After Rocky First Mission

□ June 30th, 2014

RECENT COMMENTS

Adonos - 8/27/2014

No Excuse: GameMaker Studio Is Free Right Now

I agree with this statement. Perhaps something like abstract like "unity" would of worked better.

Paden Pierry - 8/26/2014

How The Most Expensive Game Jam In History Crashed And Burned In A Single Day

Here is a filmed game jam that worked

https://www.youtube.com/watch?

v=CLp3vNTOI6c&list=UUKh_oBiplxv0BSeP8st7MXw

pokemonFanatik - 8/26/2014

Pokemon Generations Is An Even More Impressive Fan-Made Pokemon Game

Unfortunately this game was discontinued. As an alternative, I found Ludoria, a voxel based open world monster catching video game. Here is its trailer if anyone is interested :)....

Hiếu Phùng Quý - 8/26/2014

Ramiro Corbetta's Indie Tech Talk on Coding and Minimalism technology always inspire people, for more info just check out

<http://www.tuicoding.com/>

Power on Pub - 8/26/2014

Being The Hero is But Half The Tale in Crawl, On Steam Early Access Now

I do realize that, but that doesn't change my opinion. We may have to agree to disagree here. Maybe our relative gaming ages are a factor in how we like our retro art, but this just...doesn't look...

POPULAR POSTS

Indie Statik Advent Calendar – Day 1: Orcs Must Die! 2

□ December 1st, 2012

Indie Statik Advent Calendar – Day 2: Splice

□ December 2nd, 2012

Indie Statik Advent Calendar – Day 3: Vessel And Voxatron

□ December 3rd, 2012

Indie Statik Advent Calendar – Day 15: Waveform & Steel Storm: BR

□ December 15th, 2012

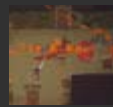

A Roguelike Primer: Best In Genre For Neophytes & Veterans Alike

□ March 8th, 2013

TAGS

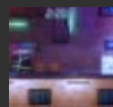

- action
- adventure
- alpha
- android
- arcade
- beta
- bundle
- demo
- development
- first-person
- free game
- free games
- game jam
- gameplay
- greenlight
- horror
- impressions
- indie game
- indie games
- indiegogo
- indie statik
- interview
- ios
- kickstarter
- Linux
- ludum dare
- Mac
- multiplayer
- ouya
- pc
- platformer
- point and click
- puzzle
- roguelike
- rpg
- screenshot saturday
- screenshot scrutiny
- shmup
- shooter
- steam
- strategy
- the greenlight
- trailer
- video
- Windows

RECENT POSTS

Being The Hero is But Half The Tale in Crawl, On Steam Early Access Now

□ August 6th, 2014

Ninja Pizza Girl Tackles The Hardships Of Being A Teen, One Pizza At A Time

□ August 5th, 2014

Screenshot Scrutiny – 2nd Aug 2014

□ August 5th, 2014

Claire Will Spook The Pixel Pants Right Off You

□ July 31st, 2014

Tapping Into My Midwestern Sensibilities: Three Fourths Home

□ July 30th, 2014

POPULAR POSTS

Indie Statik Advent Calendar – Day 1: Orcs Must Die! 2

□ December 1st, 2012

Indie Statik Advent Calendar – Day 2: Splice

□ December 2nd, 2012

Indie Statik Advent Calendar – Day 3: Vessel And Voxatron

□ December 3rd, 2012

Indie Statik Advent Calendar – Day 15: Waveform & Steel Storm: BR

□ December 15th, 2012

A Roguelike Primer: Best In Genre For Neophytes & Veterans Alike

□ March 8th, 2013

RECENT COMMENTS

Adonos - 8/27/2014

No Excuse: GameMaker Studio Is Free Right Now

I agree with this statement. Perhaps something like abstract like "unity" would of worked better.

Paden Pierry - 8/26/2014

How The Most Expensive Game Jam In History Crashed And Burned In A Single Day

Here is a filmed game jam that worked...

pokemonFanatik - 8/26/2014

Pokemon Generations Is An Even More Impressive Fan-Made Pokemon Game

Unfortunately this game was discontinued. As an alternative, I found Ludoria, a voxel based open...

NEWS IN PICTURES

Copyright 2014 IndieStatik, LLC | All Rights Reserved | Powered by Indie Games